Paul Adolph Volcker

Former Chairman of the Federal Reserve

Former Chairman of the Economic Recovery Advisory Board

Paul Adolph Volcker is an American economist. He was the Chairman of the Federal Reserve and Chairman of the Economic Recovery Advisory Board .

Educated at Princeton, Harvard and the London School of Economics, Mr. Volcker is a recipient of honorary doctorates from each of his "alma maters", as well as a number of other American and foreign universities.

In the course of his career, Mr. Volcker worked in the United States Federal Government for almost 30 years, culminating in two terms as Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System from 1979-1987, a critical period in bringing a high level of inflation to an end. In earlier stages of his career, Mr. Volcker served as Undersecretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs during the early 1970's, a period of historic change in international monetary arrangements. He was subsequently President of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and in earlier years was an official of The Chase Manhattan Bank.

Mr. Volcker retired as Chairman of Wolfensohn & Co. upon the merger of that firm with Bankers Trust. From 1996-1999, Mr. Volcker headed The Independent Committee of Eminent Persons, formed by Swiss and Jewish organizations to investigate deposit accounts and other assets in Swiss banks of victims of Nazi persecution and to arrange for their disposition. From 2000-2005, Mr. Volcker served as Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the newly formed International Accounting Standards Committee overseeing a renewed effort to develop consistent, high-quality accounting standards acceptable in all countries. Upon leaving public service in 1987, and again in 2003, he headed private, non-partisan Commissions on the Public Service, each recommending a sweeping overhaul of the organization and personnel practices of the United States Federal Government.

In 2004, Mr. Volcker was asked by UN Secretary General Kofi Annan to chair the Independent Inquiry into the United Nations Oil-for-Food Program, resulting in identification of substantial corruption and malfeasance. In 2007, Mr. Volcker was asked by the President of the World Bank to chair a panel of experts to review the operations of the Department of Institutional Integrity. That effort has culminated in broad reform of the Bank's anti-corruption effort. In November 2008, President Elect Obama chose Mr. Volcker to head the President's Economic Recovery Advisory Board which ended in Feb. 2011.

Pursuing his many continuing interests in public policy, Mr. Volcker among his extensive non-profit activities has been former Chairman of the Trilateral Commission and former Chairman of the Trustees of the Group of 30.

Since the mid- to late-1990s, the East Asia region has experienced a period of rapid development, with impetuses from various aspects. In the coming decade, the East Asian order is likely to undergo a dramatic change. The order's construction must be the product of collaborative action by all members in East Asia. Given that the concepts of each member state will certainly affect policy formation, the construction of a regional order will certainly be a function of their interaction and conception of the "region." Apart from China, what are the views on the regional order of ASEAN, South Korea and Japan in East Asia? What policies related have they adopted? How will these policies affect the formation and change of the future regional order in East Asia?

To explore these questions, the Sub-forum on "Creating a New Regional Order in East Asia" held a roundtable discussion, systematically addressing the concept of regional order from the point of view of ASEAN, South Korea, Japan and other members in this region, comprehensively analyzing their policies.

The deteriorating ecology of China, Asia and the whole world not being effectively controlled, and new environmental damage and pollution is continuously emerging. It seems to be a problem of nature and technology, but actually it is a social issue. In the past, we mainly focused on industrial and urban pollution and ignored issues related to agricultural production and food safety. With the process of industrialization, urbanization and modernization, China's agricultural pollution has been getting tougher and tougher, becoming critical restricting factors of China's economic development, social harmony and ecological safety. To prevent such problems as compound pollution in agriculture, the Sub-forum "East Asian Ecological Construction Strategies for 2011-2020" has invited scholars in sociology, history, economics, management, politics, laws, environmental science, life science and policy research to gather together and discuss "China's Agricultural Pollution During the Next Decade." Scholars will have a heated discussion on the status, trend, causes and countermeasures of agricultural pollution in Shanghai and China and make various suggestions from different perspectives, deserving of consideration by policy makers.

Main Topics:

- Definition and structure of agricultural pollution
- Characteristics and modern significance of Chinese agricultural civilization
- Status and trend of China's agricultural pollution
- Causes of China's agricultural pollution
- Countermeasures of China's agricultural pollution
- Status and trend of Shanghai's agricultural pollution
- Countermeasures of Shanghai's agricultural pollution

During the post-crisis era, the international energy market changed dramatically. The euro zone became deeply mired in the debt crisis, real economy and trade have shown little signs of rebound, and the international monetary system urgently needs reform. Facing such a complex international economic and financial situation, how can we judge its development? Will the world's economic landscape change dramatically? Or, will it remain based on the US-dominated international monetary and economic systems? Where will China's economy go in such an international environment? What about China's international competitiveness? How do we achieve the national strategies of internationalizing the RMB and building Shanghai into an international financial center? To discuss the problems above, three sub-forums of Shanghai Forum 2012, "New Mission for International Monetary Governance: A Win-win Situation", "International Trade, Investment and Governance with the Intensifying Economic Crisis" and "Low Carbonization, Security and Ever-increasing Demand: Restructuring of Asian Energy System", jointly organized this roundtable forum, inviting well-known economists and policy-making experts to explore major issues the world and China face in the post-crisis era.

Main Topics:

- The crisis and the change of the world's economic landscape
- The change of the international energy market: crisis, turning point and opportunity
- The evaluation of international competitiveness and China's international competitiveness
- Trade relations in the worsening economic crisis and the "dilemma" of the euro zone
- When and under what circumstances will China's economy collapse?
- RMB Internationalization and Shanghai International Financial Center Construction
- Seize the favorable opportunity and deepen the reform of RMB exchange rate mechanism
- Significance and challenges of the financial cooperation between Taiwan and the mainland
- Are financial reform and financial globalization of the same target?

The successful modernization and transformation of China, Japan and South Korea, has progressively improved the political and economic status of the whole East Asia region. In the 21st century, East Asia has the potential to become a new economic center. Until now, the integration of East Asia has mainly been on the economic level. Although a wide range of economic and trade cooperation has been achieved, there still exists considerable political differences and a potential sense of strategic competition.

How precisely do we grasp the function and the limit of economy in the construction of a new regional order, and how do we maximize its role? What roles do safety, institutional arrangements and regional identity play in the process? In order to play a critical role, what should China do? What are the expectations of other members for China? What restricting factors will China encounter? To address the problems above, the Sub-forum “Create a New Regional Order in East Asia” held this roundtable discussion.

Main Topics:

- China and order construction in East Asia
- The problems encountered in the order construction of East Asia
- Economic relations and regional order construction of East Asia

12:30		FTA Roundtable Closing

Since the Doha Round of trade negotiations among the WTO membership started in 2001, which is at a deadlock, regional free trade agreements have expanded both in size and in number. This situation is getting more and more obvious in the Asia-Pacific region. As the world economy undergoes a rapid structural adjustment today, what will the burst of FTAs do on the trade and production of the countries involved? What kind of trade strategies will they adopt under the new economic circumstances? This is an important background of this forum.

Formally implemented this year, the free trade agreement between South Korea and the United States will have a considerable impact on trade and production of South Korea-Japan, China-South Korea, and China-Japan, as well as on FTA negotiations between these three countries. This is another important background of this forum.

The United States has added a lot of new content in its FTA with South Korea. In the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) negotiations it makes efforts to promote, the United States places much emphasis on the so-called trade and investment of the next generation, which also has an important impact on the Asia-Pacific region free trade negotiations. This is the third important background of this forum.

With all the backgrounds above, scholars invited by the forum, will analyze not only the trade strategies in the new global economic environment, but also the prospects and influences of free trade negotiations in the Asia-Pacific region, including TPP. The forum will mostly focus on the establishment of a free trade area in Northeast Asia, especially between China and South Korea. Therefore, scholars will not only simply make analyses on the process and prospect of China-South Korea free trade area negotiations, but also on the influences of the FTA from various aspects, including the impact on different industries, on trade, and on industrial restructuring and government functions. Although these analyses are focused on China-South Korea free trade area, they will also help us to understand the possible future changes of foreign trade strategies and industrial policies in the two countries.

Faced with the combined pressures of resource safety, the transition to low carbon technologies and general expansion of the economy, Asia's current system for the supply and demand of our nations' energy awaits a sea-change – and the development of renewable resources is set to play a key role in this transformation. Asian economies continue to exhibit a high level of reliance upon fossil fuels, especially coal, and when compared with North American and European reliance on clean energy (natural gas, nuclear power) and renewable resources (hydroelectric, solar and wind power), despite showing impressive increases in recent years, still stand at a disadvantage to the Western nations. Lowering our reliance on fossil fuels, combating the threat of climate change, breaking through the restraints to economic growth placed by our non-renewable resources – all this depends on our ability to develop new resources and low-carbon technologies.

Still, there is no doubt about the fact that the development and usage of new technologies for our resources both lie in a state of great uncertainty, and the attitude of governments and city councils has determined a similar level of uncertainty in the ultimate status and development of low-carbon technologies. That said, there is a great and untold potential for the research and development of new resources in Asia, and it is of primary importance that we search out and catalyse the creation of a win-win situation for the development of non-renewable resources. The transformation of the supply and demand of our resources ought to follow a technological line that can be accepted and utilized by a number of economies, and to add impetus to the creation of public policies, markets for resources and movements for associations for relevant themes and problems. Recently, the primary economies of Asia have already started a great degree of experimentation in the development of new resources, transformation of existing systems and nurturing of market conditions through political, academic and business level discussions and investigations – it is now possible to deepen the level of understanding on the part of Asian and other nations in regard the win-win situation of renewable resources, and for us to deepen our understanding and reach common agreement from an international and regional perspective.

The aim of our conference is to look at a potential point of breakthrough in the resource developments of East Asia – the development of new resource technologies in the automobile industry. There will be a round-table discussion focussing on the technological choices available, the possibilities for market development and the support offered by our respective governments, to which topics we hope to give a multi-perspective explanation and deeper analysis.

Shanghai Forum Delegation Visits South Korean SK Group >>

From Mar. 12 to 15, 2012, the delegation of Shanghai Forum Organizing Committee, led by Prof. Lin Shangli, Vice President of Fudan University, called upon the South Korean SK Group for consultation and discussion of matters concerning the upcoming “Shanghai Forum 2012”. The delegation members included Sub-forum Chairman and Associate Dean of the School of International Relations and Public Affairs, Prof. Wu Xinbo; Secretary-General of the Forum and Adviser to President on International Affairs of Fudan University, Prof. Chen Yinzhang; Executive Vice-Secretary-General and Secretariat Office Director of the Forum, Associate Prof. Zhang Yi; and Vice-Secretary-General of the Forum and Deputy Director of the Financial Office, Ms. Yu Qing.

While in South Korea, the delegation visited SK Telecom and SK Innovation, as well as SK Headquarters, coming to fully understand SK Group's current development and strategy in the fields of communications, energy, and chemical engineering. Together with Vice Chairman of the SK Group, Mr. Jae-Youl Kim, they looked into future prospects for the integration of industry, study and research between Fudan University and SK Group. Furthermore, Vice President Lin Shangli made explicit Shanghai Forum's purpose to establish a platform for academic, industrial, and political discourse, to serve as a location for further mutual engagement, and to make science and technology better capable of serving society.

During talks between the delegation and Korea Foundation for Advanced Studies, the Secretariat of the Shanghai Forum Organizing Committee reported on the progress of “Shanghai Forum 2012” preparations to President of KFAS, Mr. Park In-kook, who expressed full satisfaction. The two parties ardently discussed contents of the forthcoming round tables on renewable energy and free-trade agreements as well as arrangements for honored guests who will be in attendance. On the topic of renewable energy, both resolved to take a forward stance in the field of electric vehicle technology.

While in South Korea, the delegation also met Secretary-General for General Affairs of South Korea, Secretary-General of Media, together with Assistant-Secretary-General of Environmental Affairs. They exchanged ideas regarding some central Sino-Korean issues such as green-economy, and the South Korea's general election.

On March 15, the delegation convened a meeting at the hotel at which they were lodged to summarize the knowledge gained from this visit to South Korea. Vice President Lin Shangli raised practical concerns and expectations for Shanghai Forum, hoping that “Shanghai Forum 2012” will be capable of greater openness, further integrate and strengthen the ties between strategy and thought, scholars and think tanks, strategy and technology, academy and industry, and intellectuals and government, so that Shanghai Forum will possess more real influence.

Shanghai Forum 2012 Holds Preparation Meeting >>

On the morning of May 5, 2012, the second Shanghai Forum 2012 preparation meeting was held at Guanghua Tower. President of Fudan University Yang Yuliang and President of Korea Foundation for Advanced Studies Professor Park In-kook were in attendance, and the meeting was presided over by Lin Shangli, Vice-President of Fudan University.

At the meeting, Professor Zhang Yi, Executive Vice-Secretary-General of Shanghai Forum 2012, introduced Shanghai Forum 2012's overall preparation status. Xiao Sijian, Director of the Office of Public Relations, announced the current progress of media collaboration, followed by the leaders of the 10 panels on the status of preparation and development of each of their respective panels, including main topics, the numbers of guests and VIPs, etc. President Yang Yuliang, President Park In-kook, and the leaders of relevant departments were briefed on these reports.

Yang Yuliang indicated that Shanghai Forum 2012 preparation work is advancing smoothly. Each sub-forum has already conducted in-depth inquiry and research through preview session roundtables, ensuring a high level of quality and greater innovation compared to previous years. He stressed that since Shanghai Forum will consider strategic questions of both global and regional importance, it will touch directly on current issues we are facing today; since it is founded on advanced scientific research, we must also move towards the common masses.

Park In-kook believes we are currently at a historical moment in the transformation of Asia's political, economic, and social order. This is a crucial hour, and Shanghai Forum should provide suggestions and ideas on the problems and challenges we will face during the transformation.

As scheduled, Shanghai Forum 2012 will be held from May 26 to May 28. The theme of this year's Shanghai Forum is "Strategy for the 2011-2020." Shanghai Forum is hosted by Fudan University, with support from Korea Foundation for Advanced Studies' International Economic Forum. With "Concentrating on Asia, Focusing on Hot Issues, Congregating Elites, Promoting Interactions, Enhancing Cooperation and Seeking Consensus" as its stated mission, Shanghai Forum will be devoted to forging a platform for 3-way mutual engagement and exchange between academic, political, and business spheres, inviting leaders and elites from all circles to launch dialogue and cooperation. The Forum will strive to carry out extensive, multidimensional, and thorough research on today's significant issues of global economics and the international situation in order to provide comprehensive, progressive advice for Asia's economy, politics, society, and culture. So far, Shanghai Forum has successfully held 6 annual sessions, attended by a total of 1,800 persons from both home and abroad.
